VISUAL IDENTITY SYSTEM

Basic Specification Part

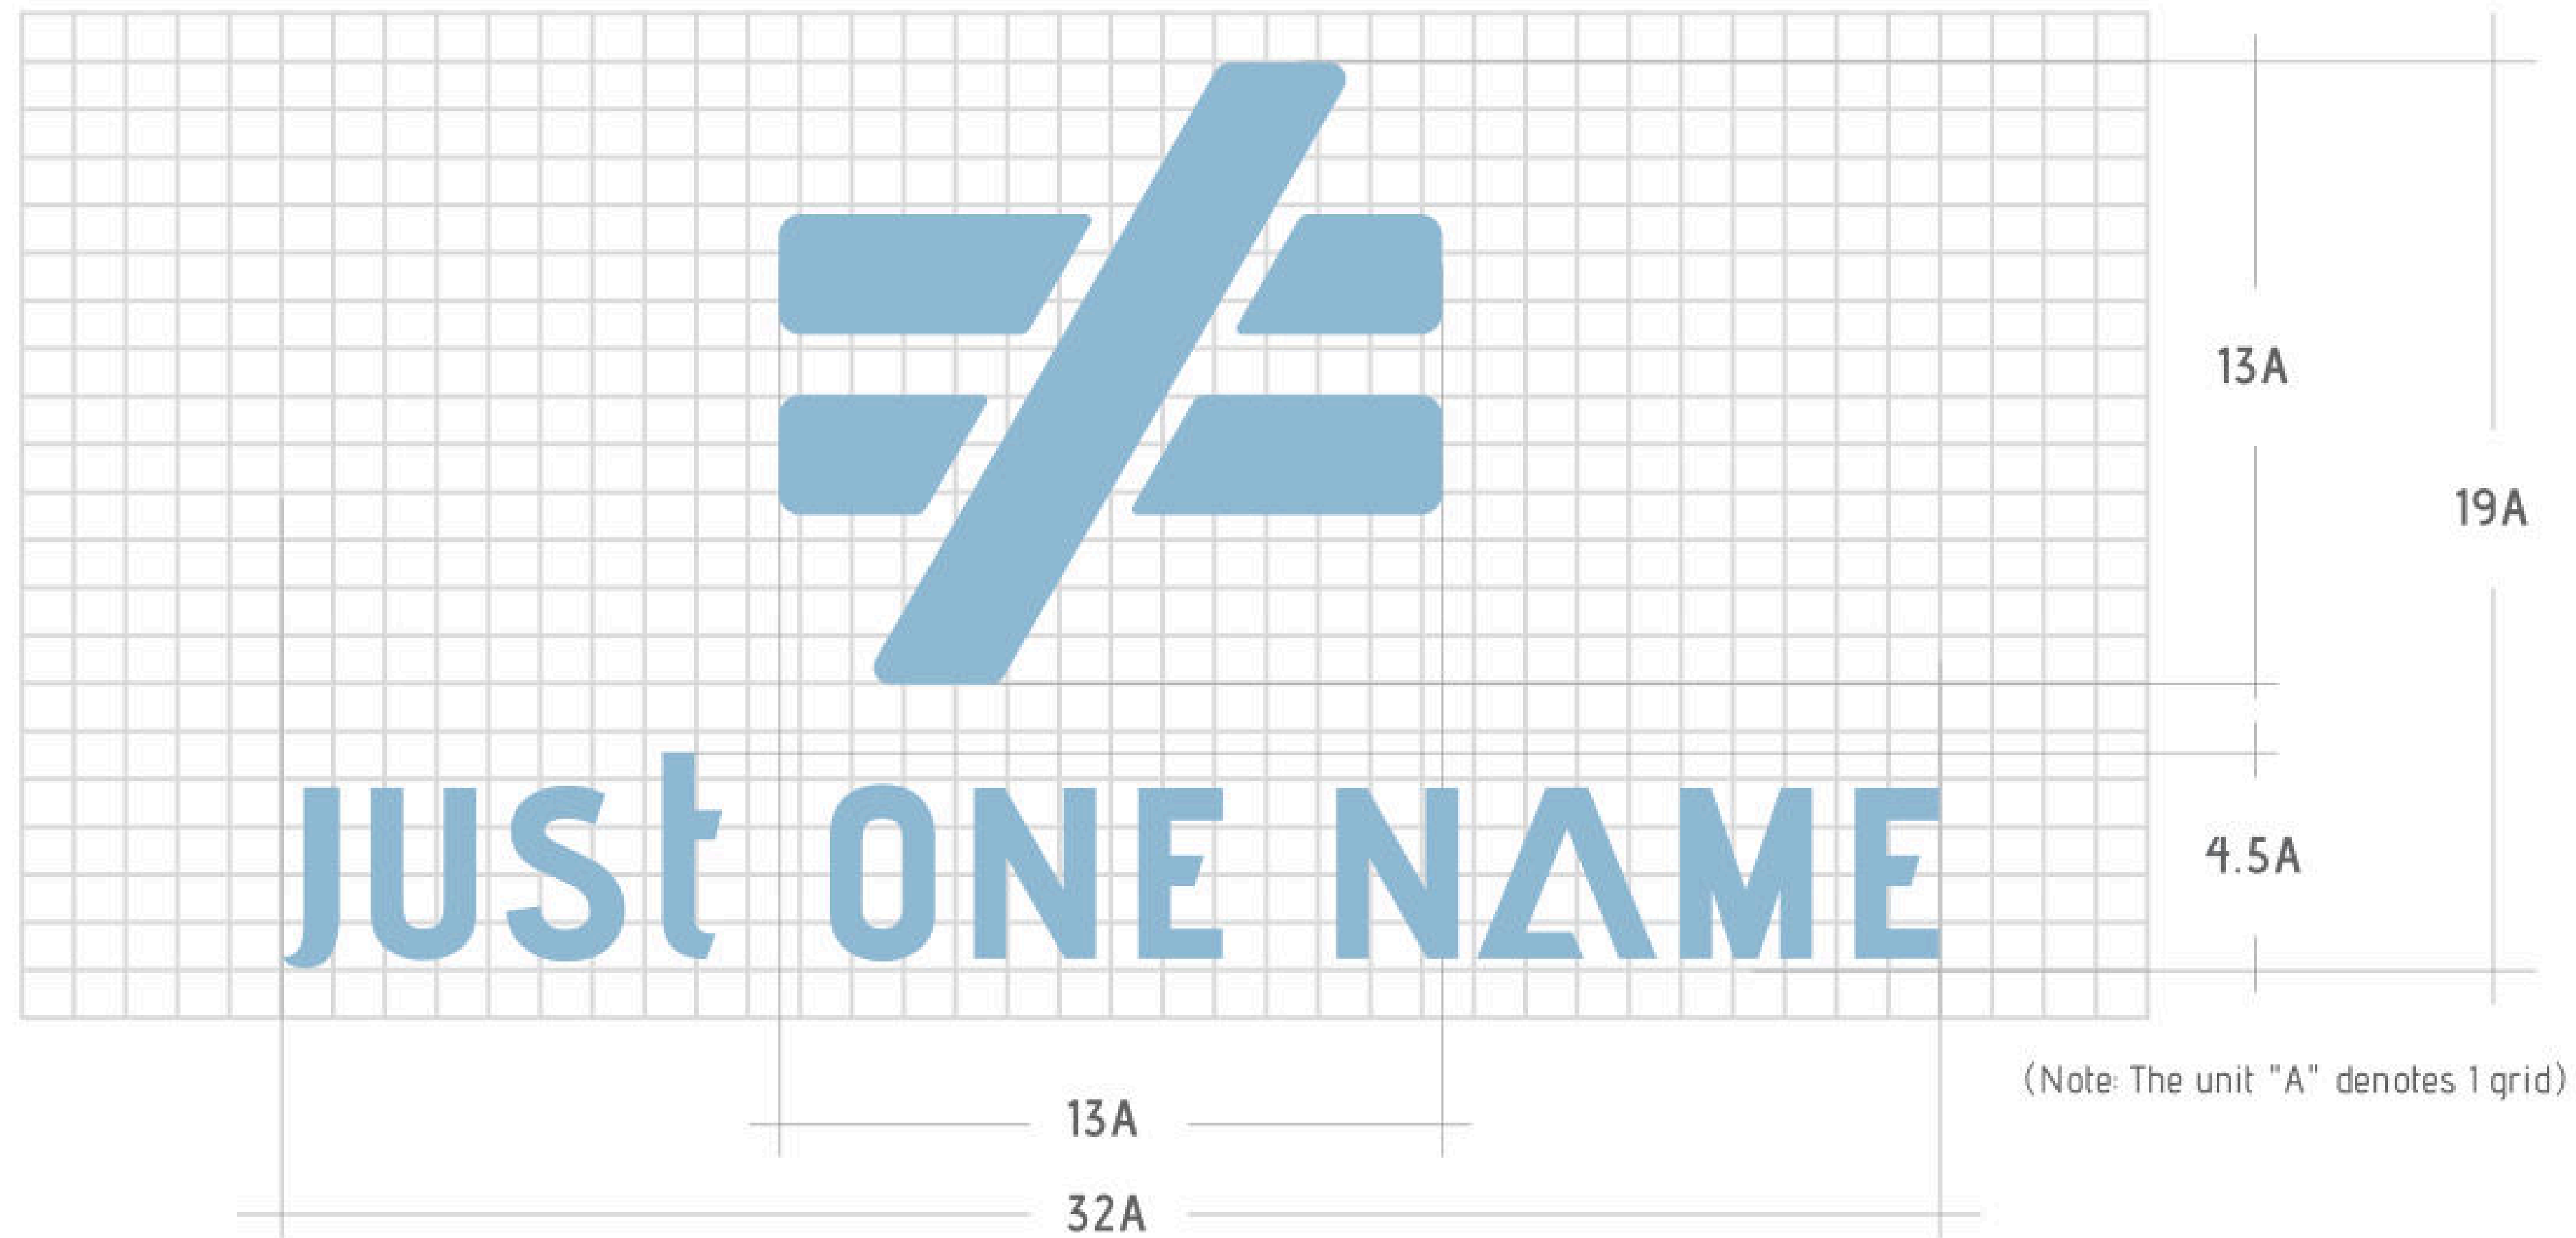

The effectiveness of a brand logo is equivalent to that of a personal signature; it certifies the origin of a product, a service, a document, or a communication. It represents the company's reputation and is a critical component in establishing a brand image. The brand logo is the core of the brand image and must be used correctly to avoid distortion; it should not be redrawn or altered. The brand logo consists of three parts: the standard mark (graphic), the standard font, and the brand belief. The standard mark (graphic) particularly reflects the brand's positioning and value.

The horizontal combination of the logo consists of the logo graphic and the brand name. In use, the structure and proportional relationship of the brand logo must not be altered. This page provides the horizontal application version of the brand logo, outlining its application scope to facilitate unified use and management.

To more concretely convey the brand image, the graphic logo of JUST ONE NAME may be used independently in some cases. From the graphic logo, new graphic elements are derived through simplification, deformation, synthesis, and extraction, allowing these elements to echo the graphic logo in application. According to the guidelines, three graphic styles can be combined to meet the needs of different scenarios. When used, they should be enlarged, reduced, or copied exactly as per this standard.

The grid system for logo design is primarily used for the quick and accurate drawing of the logo, allowing one to understand the relationships between the logo's shape, proportions, line thickness, and spatial distances. This facilitates precise drawing. It is essential to strictly adhere to this drawing method in practical applications to ensure the accurate reproduction of the logo's design.

The JUST ONE NAME logo can be represented in both positive and negative forms. These two forms can also be displayed using colored or non-colored systems. This page shows the design for black-on-white and white-on-black formats, primarily for use in monochrome (black and white) printing, such as newspaper advertisements. Please strictly follow these guidelines when using the logo in these contexts.
